Lamont Bartlett is a commercial litigation lawyer with a focus on construction litigation, shareholders' disputes, partnership disputes and complex contractual disputes. Additionally, he represents individuals and corporations in a wide variety of commercial litigation matters involving mergers and acquisitions, commercial real estate, land development and fraud.

Lamont is well versed in interpreting and resolving commercial lease disputes, as well as resolving issues involving complex estate and family trusts matters with corporate elements.

In Lamont's construction litigation practice he has worked with clients primarily in the construction, oil and gas servicing, and related business fields. His experience includes dealing with construction bonds (performance, bid, and labor and materials bonds), builder's lien matters, including shareholder oppression, derivative actions, plans of arrangement, and contract and construction disputes.
